

Teaching Survival Skills & Ethics

13th Annual Trainer-of-Trainers Conference

June 10-15, 2006 ~ The Silvertree Hotel ~ Snowmass, CO

An intensive workshop to assist faculty in establishing comprehensive training programs in professional development and research ethics.

Organized by Michael Zigmond and Beth Fischer (Univ. of Pittsburgh)

---

A conference that will help you prepare graduate students, postdoctoral fellows, residents, and faculty for success!

Receive instruction and materials that will enable you to provide training related to:

- COMMUNICATION SKILLS

- writing manuscripts
- teaching & giving seminars
- writing grant proposals
- networking

- RESPONSIBLE CONDUCT

- key issues & strategies for teaching
- leading effective case discussions
- considering current issues
- assessing competency

- EMPLOYMENT

- preparing CVs and résumés
- interviewing and negotiating
- management skills

- INCREASING DIVERSITY

- women
- under-represented minorities
- international students

...and much more!

This conference is supported by The Office of Research Integrity, The National Institutes of Health, and The University of Pittsburgh.

For more information, contact

The Survival Skills & Ethics Program
www.survival.pitt.edu
University of Pittsburgh
phone: 412-578-3716

survival@pitt.edu
fax: 412-578-3790

---

What others have said about our programs:

“Some institutions have pioneered efforts such as the “group mentoring” program run by Michael Zigmond and Beth Fischer at the University of Pittsburgh. The best such programs, like theirs, offer students guidance on a broad range of professional conduct...” C.K. Gunsalus, The Chronicle of Higher Education, 28 March 1997.

“Zigmond’s course on Survival Skills in universities has already become famous... and now his ethics curriculum is wowing researchers as well.” Science, 23 June 1995